On Technology Inc. last week released its Meeting Maker group scheduling software -- two months late, but offering users a welcome

Macintosh face in a crowd of mostly PC-based schedulers.

The software, from Mitch Kapor's 3-year-old firm, is designed to provide the standard array of scheduling tools to help users automate the process of determining the best time and place for meetings, company officials said.

Meeting Maker departs from the throng of PC-based offerings by providing those scheduling capabilities for Macintosh users on AppleTalk LANs and stressing simplicity, according to officials and early users.

"They've stayed with a very simple interface," said Mark Loncar, a technical supervisor at the Los Angeles office of advertising firm BBDO Worldwide Inc. "You don't even need the manual to get used to it."

That simplicity is important to the product's appeal, users said.
Many companies adopting network schedulers to sift through a morass of personal schedules and shared resources have found users are reluctant to take to the programs.

"We had to look for something that people wouldn't be afraid to use," said a network analyst at a greeting-card company in the Midwest who asked to remain anonymous. "Meeting Maker provided the best level of functionality and ease of use we've seen."

The company also examined ASD Software Inc.'s Planisoft, a scheduler designed for Macs and PCs on NetBIOS LANs. Planisoft provided a full roster of features, but is not as easy to use as the AppleTalk-based Meeting Maker, the analyst said.

Ease of use is critical for schedulers such as Meeting Maker, which schedule meetings by matching suggested times with the personal calendars of all proposed attendees. If users don't update their personal calendars, the program can't schedule meetings reliably.

"The design of our organization requires a lot of [ad hoc] scheduling of meetings and allocating conference rooms," Loncar said.

Meeting Maker also features an "auto-pick" feature that automatically proposes meeting times based solely on a list of suggested attendees, company officials said.

Meeting Maker, available from most resellers of Macintosh products, is priced at $495 per five-user pack and $895 per 10-user pack.

On, which has offices in Cambridge, Mass., and Hercules, Calif., can be reached at (617) 876-0900 or (415) 724-8818.
